

Surviving the Birmingham bombings

Sarah Collins Rudolph was 12 years old and standing close to her 14-year-old sister and three other Black girls when an explosion rocked Birmingham's 16th Street Baptist Church. Sarah's sister and the three other girls were killed instantly. Sarah was showered with broken glass and lost an eye. Sixty years later, come hear Sarah's story and reflect on this pivotal moment in the Civil Rights Movement – and what it means for today.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 26, 5 PM

The John D. O'Bryant African American Institute

Northeastern University

40 Leon Street, West Village F

A reception and refreshments will follow the talk

Northeastern University

JOINTLY SPONSORED BY THE

School of Journalism (College of Arts, Media and Design), the John D. O'Bryant African American Institute, and Department of Africana Studies (CSSH)